Foundations of Individual Behavior

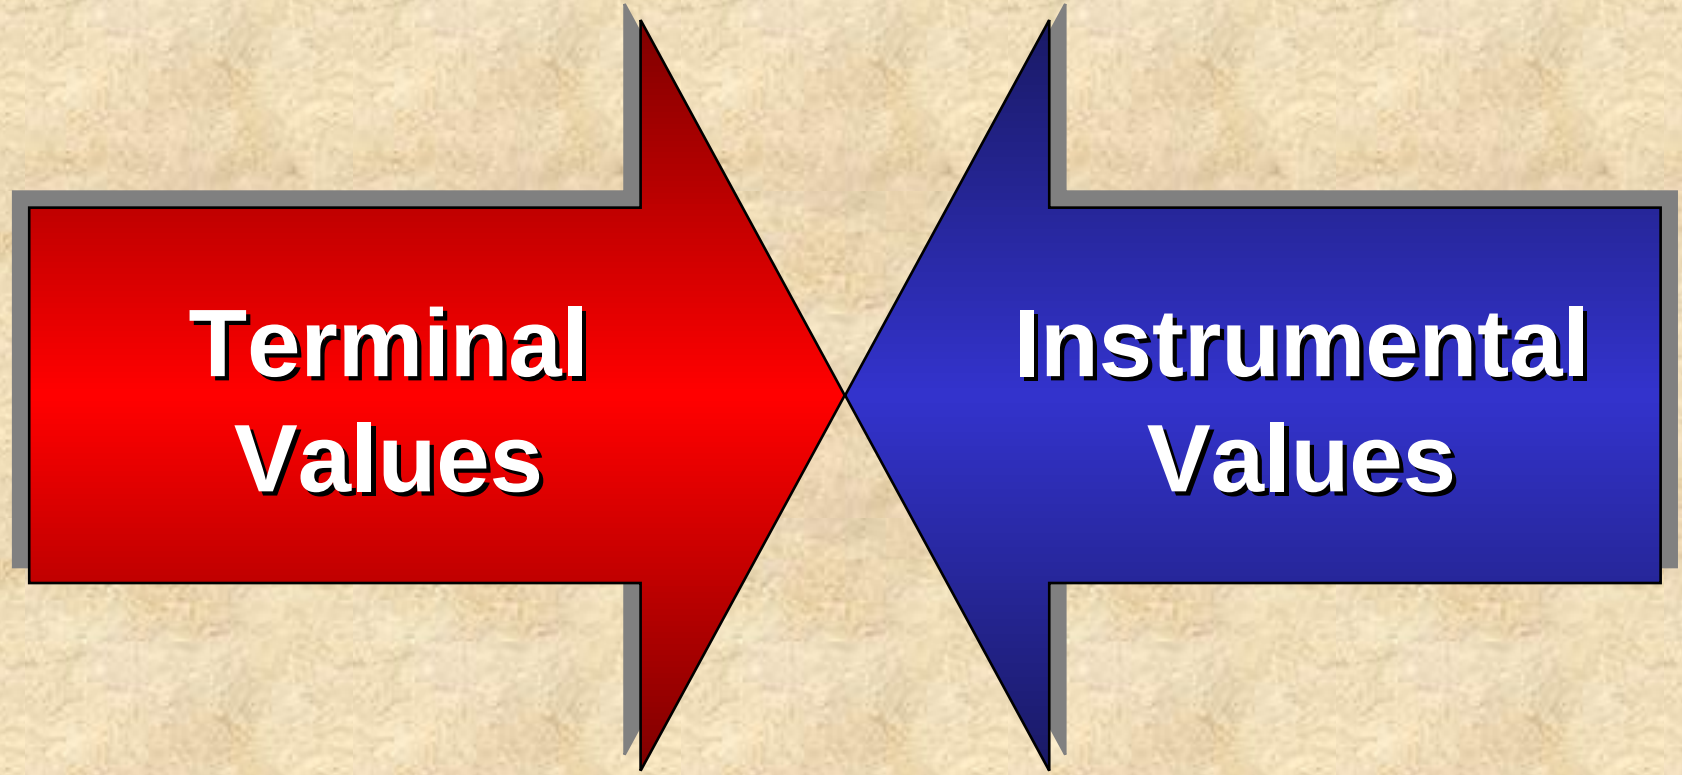

Learning Objectives

- List the main values in today's workforce
- Learn the relationship between satisfaction and productivity
- Explain the theory of cognitive dissonance
- Review the relationship between attitudes and behavior

Learning Objectives

- Learn that two people can see the same thing and interpret it differently
- Summarize attribution theory
- Outline the learning process

Types of Values

Dominant Values in Today's Workforce

Career Stage	Entered the Workforce	Approximate Current Age	Dominant Work Values
1. Protestant Work Ethic	Mid-1940s to Late 1950s	60 to 75	Hard working; loyal to firm; conservative
2. Existential	1960s to Mid-1970s	45 to 60	Nonconforming; seeks autonomy; loyal to self
3. Pragmatic	Mid-1970s to Mid-1980s	35 to 45	Ambitious, hard worker; loyal to career
4. Generation X	Mid-1980s through 1990s	Under 35	Flexible, values leisure; loyal to relationships

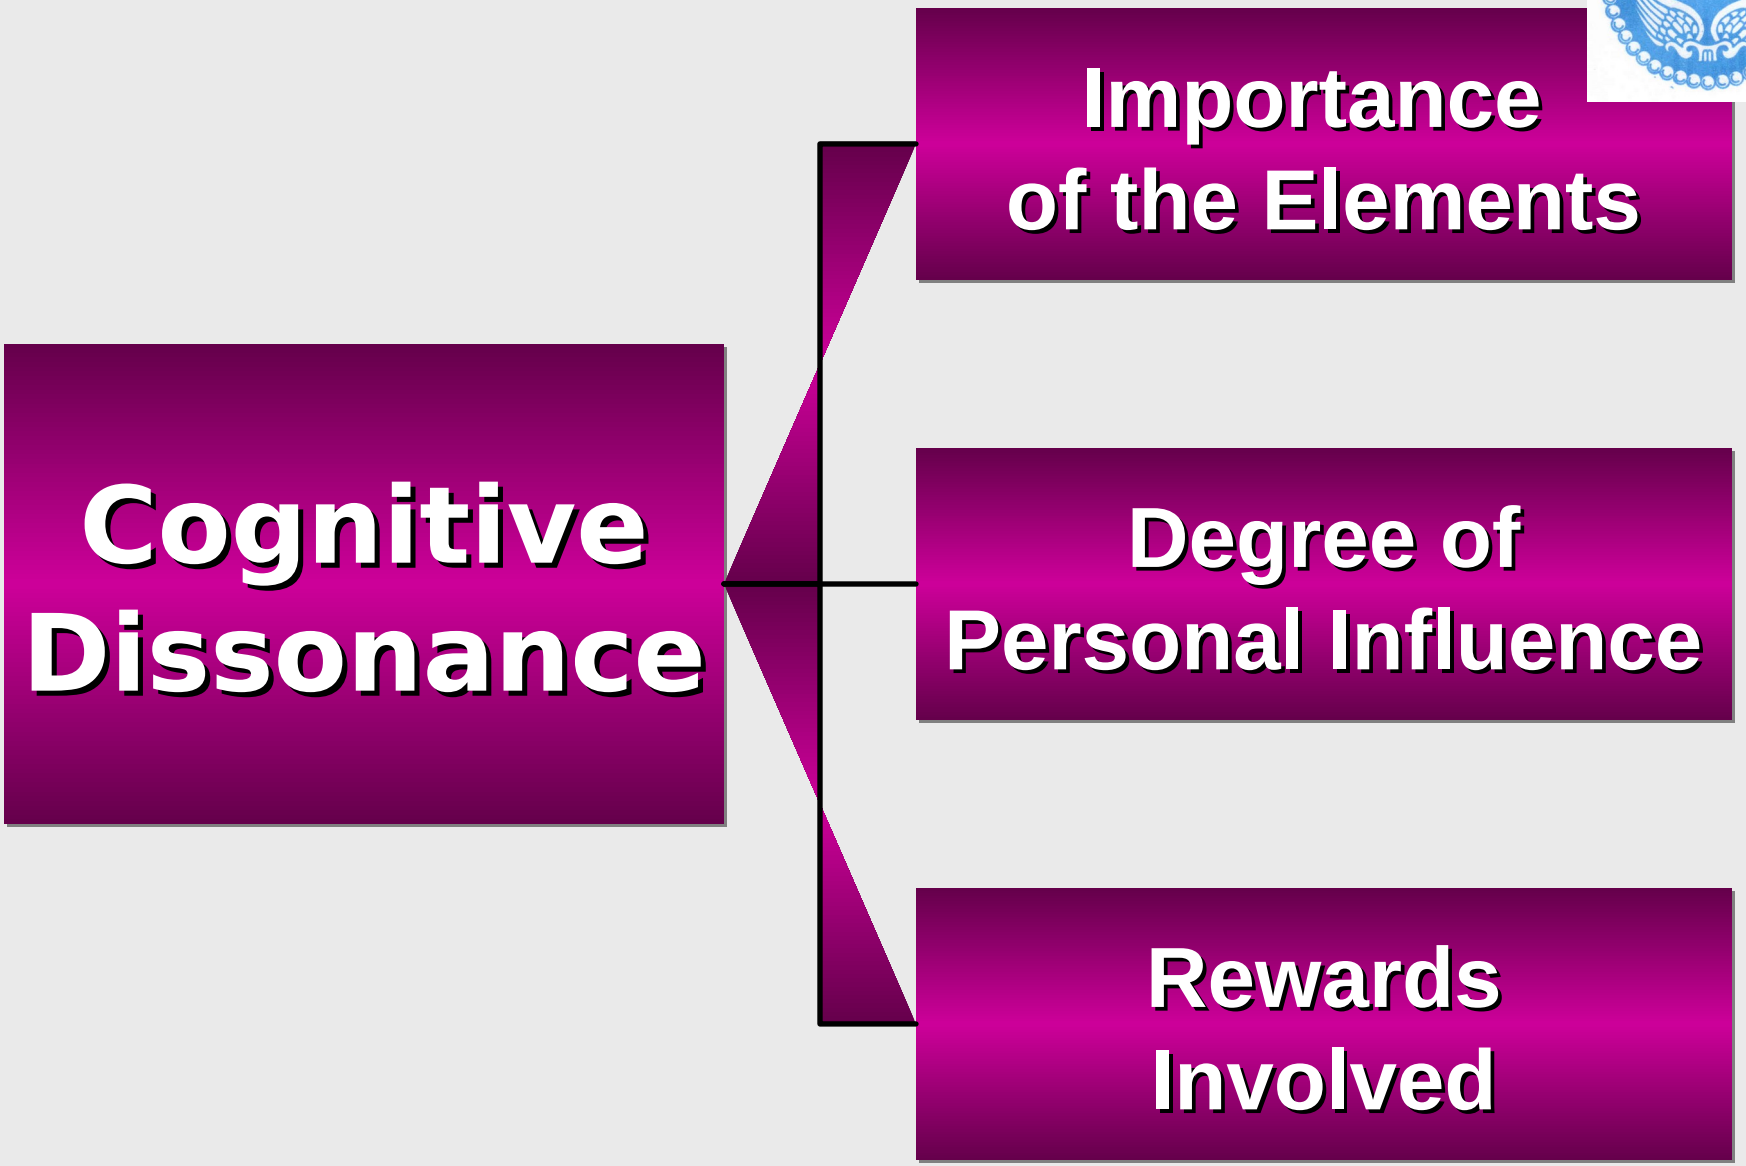

Values Across Cultures

- Power Distance
- Individualism
- Quantity of Life
- Uncertainty Avoidance
- Long-Term or Short-Term

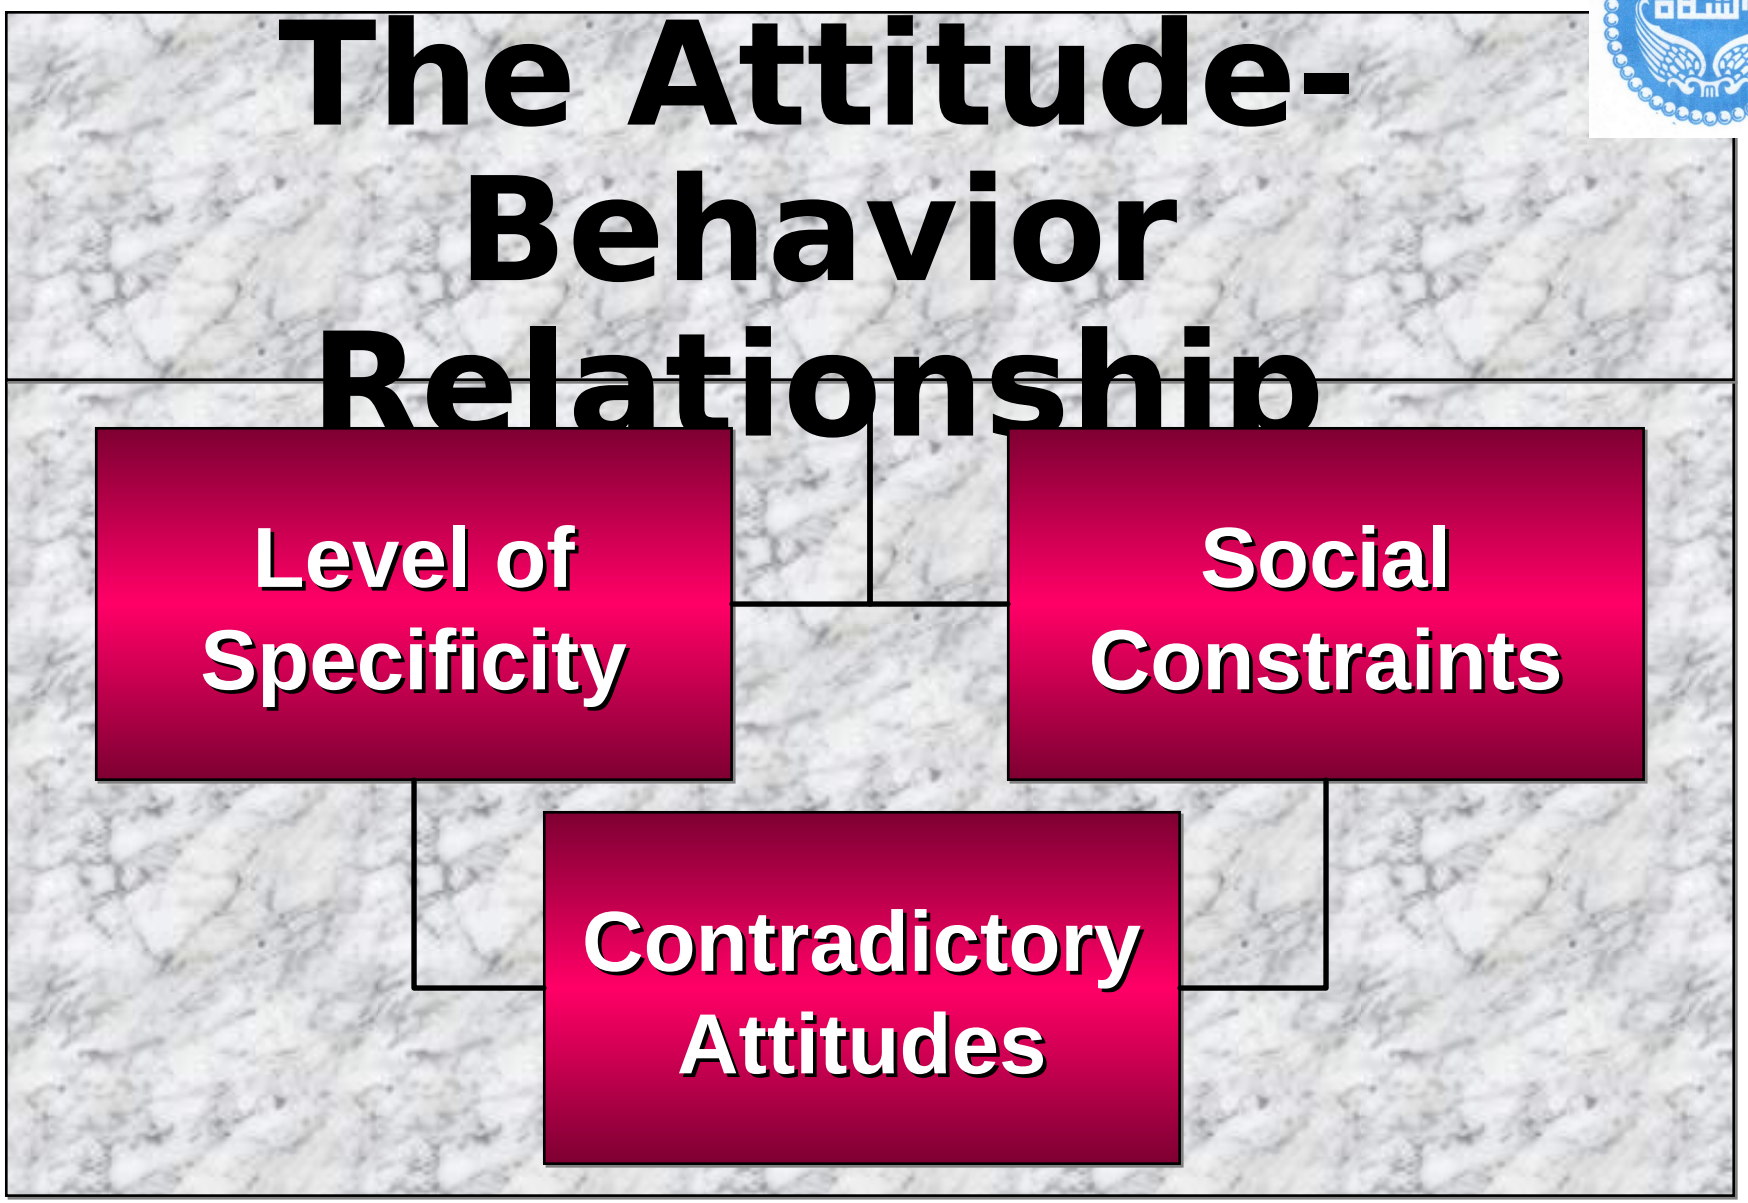

Job Satisfaction

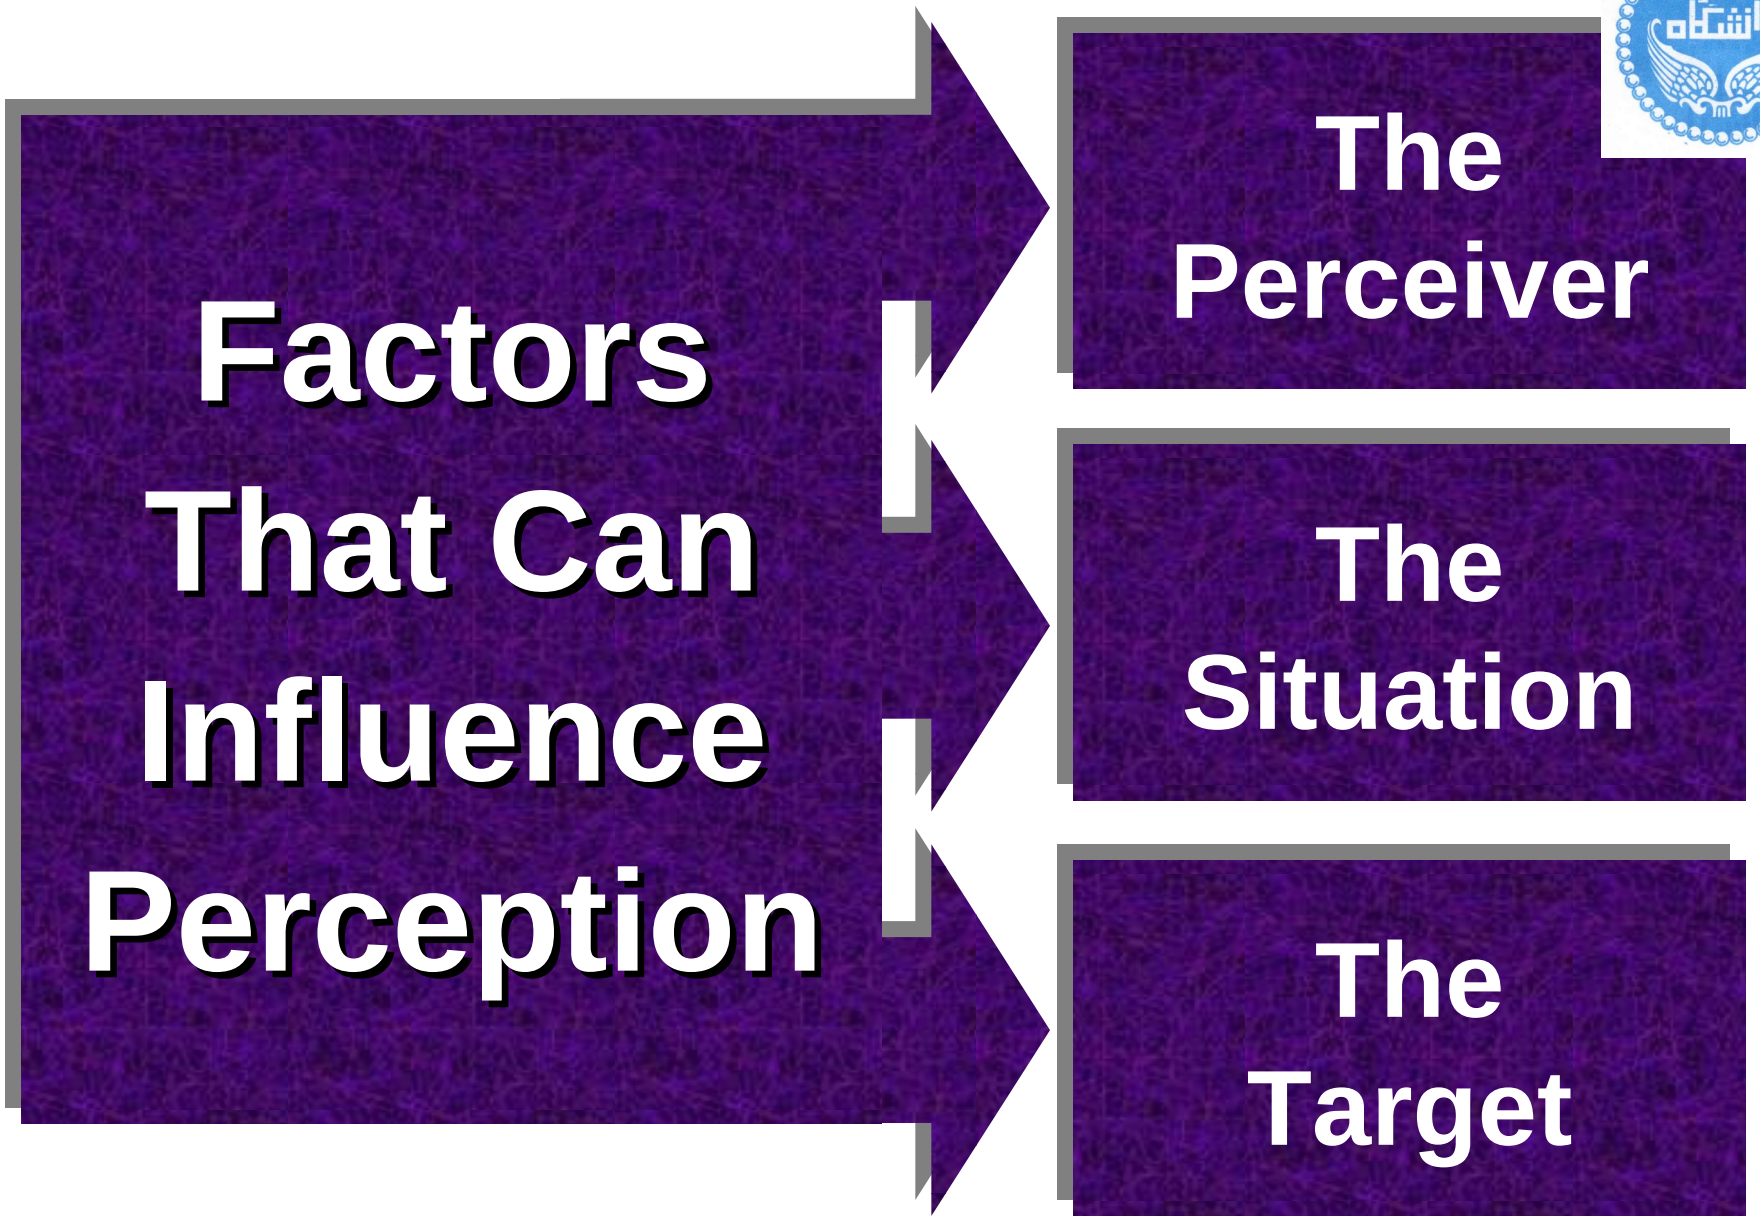

Determinants of Job Satisfaction

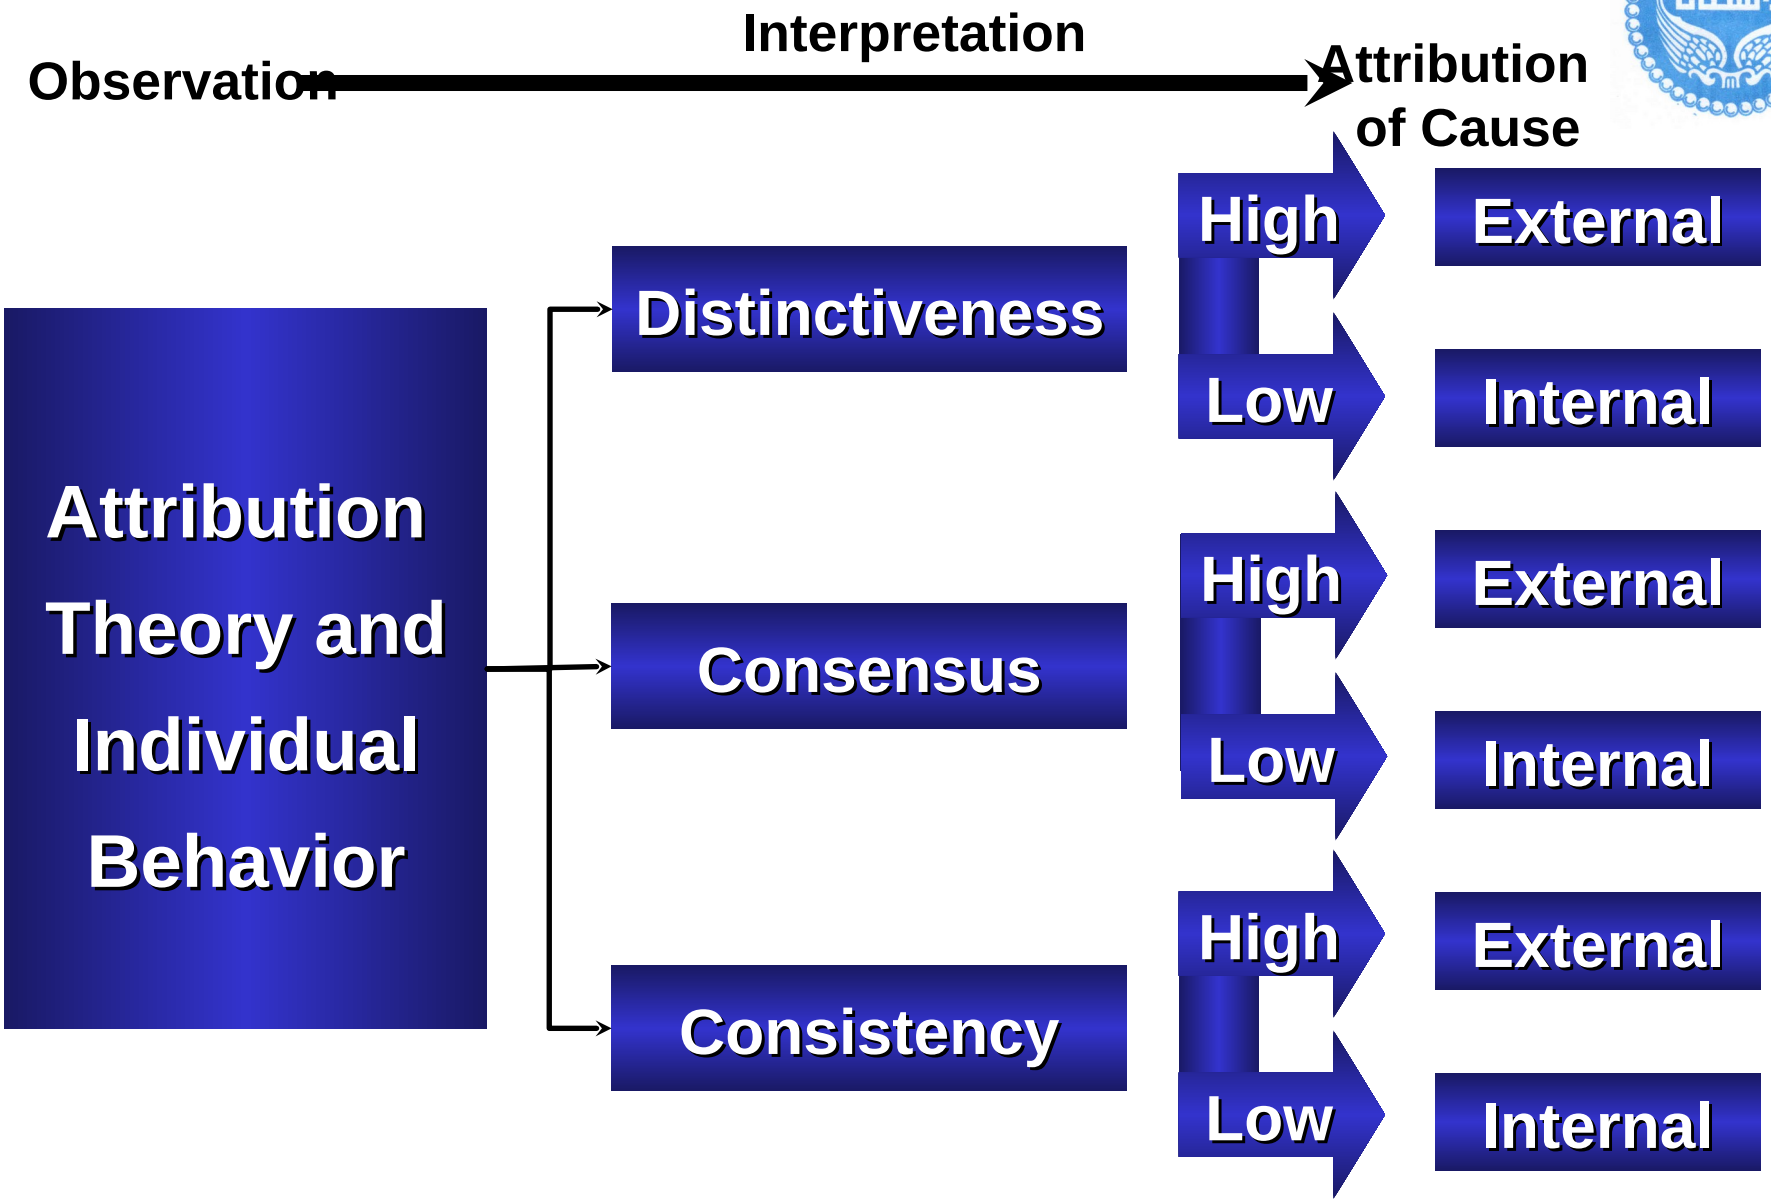

Satisfaction Productivity Relationship

Cognitive Dissonance
Importance of the Elements
Degree of Personal Influence
Rewards Involved

The Attitude-Behavior Relationship

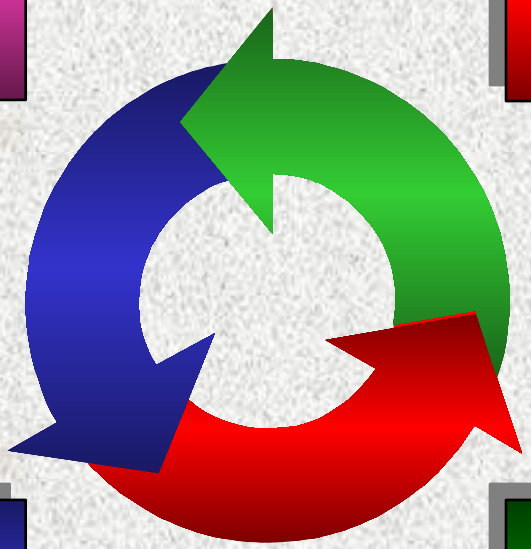

Factors That Can Influence Perception
The Perceiver
The Situation
The Target

Observation
Interpretation
Attribution of Cause
Attribution Theory and Individual Behavior
Distinctiveness
Consensus
Consistency
High
Low
High
Low
High
Low
External
Internal External
Internal External
Internal

Perceptual Shortcuts

Selectivity

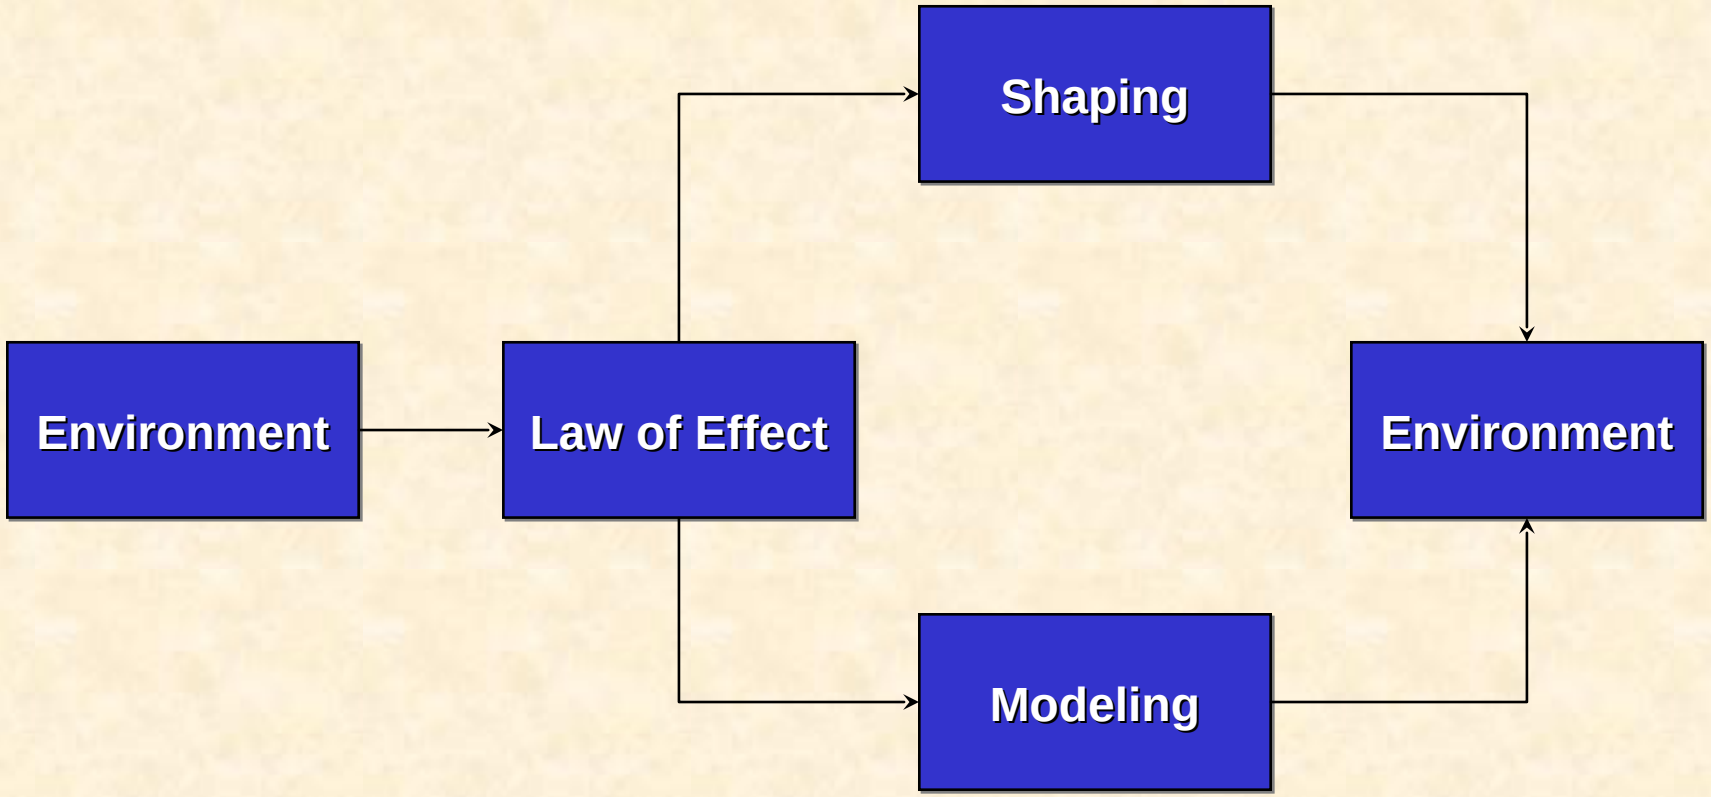

Assumed Similarity

Halo Effect

Stereotyping

The Learning Process

Key Variables Affecting Behavior

